

Editorial

The International Tinnitus Journal is now becoming more regular and receiving good articles from all over the world. This issue comes out in June as it should be and we hope to keep the June and December dates for the two annual issues.

During the transition from New York to Brasília we got delayed in two issues so that the 2013 ones are being published in 2014. We are now planning to have 3 issues published this year and 3 next year in order to close the gap and attain complete regularity. After that we shall apply for our impact factor which we believe will be good because of the open access in the web. The ITJ articles reach many countries and many researchers throughout the world. This is compatible with our objective to be a truly international scientific journal.

We encourage at this point the submission of good articles to ITJ so that we can get three issues out in the next two years.

All the articles published are peer reviewed and approved. Our Editorial Board is composed by researchers from all over the world. We believe therefore that ITJ will survive and continue to thrive in the years to come.

Of course we need the support of the scientific community in order to get good submissions for the journal.
